GUILTY CONSCIENCE

THIS WEEK IN THE CITY
EVERYONE'S TALKING ABOUT IT

EVAN TALKS DEBUT SINGLE, FASHION TRENDS, AND LIFE IN THE BIG APPLE

"PILOT"

CONFESSIONS • THE CITY • HE SAID, SHE SAID • WHO IS SHE?

WHAT'S INSIDE?

5

CONFESSIONS

So... who actually sent this in? Was it the person on the cover? Or someone you passed on the subway this morning? Real stories. No names. You'll never know.

7

THE CITY

What's the latest fads in NYC right now? What's the hottest neighborhood? Is the scoop hotter than the L train on a July afternoon? What party were you not invited to?

9

HE SAID, SHE SAID

We asked one question — and got every answer. How does she feel about it? How does he? And what does the rest of the city actually think? This week's conversation, unfiltered.

11

BLIND ITEMS

Everyone's been thinking it, but one person sent it in.

13

GUILTY PLEASURES

What are we obsessing over this week? The snack we can't stop eating, the recipe we made at midnight, the game we played when we should've been sleeping. No shame here.

SHE SAID

HIS TAKE

"I've been on both sides of this. And the version of me that wasn't honest upfront caused real damage."

Going too far in a hookup isn't always about what happens physically — it's about what you let happen emotionally without being upfront about it. If you're spending the night, cooking breakfast, doing the whole 'let's watch a movie' thing — you are actively blurring the lines whether you mean to or not. And if she's reading into it? That's on you. Be honest before things escalate. You're not doing anyone a favor by keeping it vague because it's comfortable. If all you want is a hookup, say that. Clearly. And then actually act like it. Mixed signals aren't mysterious — they're just selfish.

THEY SAID - THE QUEER TAKE

THEIR TAKE

"In queer dating, the lines between hookup and something more get complicated fast — especially when your community is small."

When you're queer in a city like NYC, your hookup and your friend group are often the same five people. So 'just a hookup' comes with extra stakes. You'll see them at the same parties. You probably follow the same people. And suddenly 'no strings' starts to feel like a lie you're telling yourself. The rule I've learned? If you wouldn't be okay seeing them leave with someone else at the same party — you were never just hooking up. Check in with yourself before you check in with them. The expectation isn't always about love. Sometimes it's just about being treated like you matter. And that? Is never too much to ask for.
